

5TH ANNUAL PEARLS IN THE BACKYARD

This CE course gathers together four SDDS member dentists who will present pearls for the general practitioner.

Temporomandibular Disorders: An Update on Scientific Evidence

Clifford Chow, DDS

Recent scientific studies have added significant insight into the field of temporomandibular disorders. This presentation will summarize some of the important findings in recent scientific literature.

Lesions that Mimic Inflammatory Defects of Pulpal Origin

David C. Hatcher, DDS, MSc, MRCD

There are several odontogenic and non-odontogenic lesions that radiographically mimic inflammatory lesions of pulpal origin. This presentation will discuss the diagnostic process and imaging methods that will lead to the correct interpretation.

The Standard of Practice in Contemporary Endodontics

Gregory J. Kolber, DDS

The movement toward evidence-based healthcare in medicine and dentistry has been gaining ground quickly over the past few decades. It has facilitated the development of guidelines for the delivery of care which are defined in order to describe appropriate care based on the best available scientific evidence and consensus, reduce inappropriate variation in practice, provide a more rational basis for referral to specialists, provide a focus for continuing education, promote efficient use of resources and act as a focus for quality control.

Minimal Preparation for Maximum Success

Michael A. Miyasaki, DDS

Today patients are increasingly looking for aesthetic improvements that are minimally-invasive and affordable. Unfortunately many clinicians are not aware of the options that fulfill many of these patients' wants. This program will provide the current information clinicians need to be prepared to discuss the options and feel confident walking patients through their discovery experience, co-select the appropriate treatment, and then provide the desired conservative and painless treatments.
